Play

Play is the great joy of childhood; it is through play that children can be themselves.

Play activities are a proven means of developing various aspects of physical, emotional and mental behavior. The concept of competition is not eliminated, but it essential that the competitive structures presented are suited to the children's behavioral characteristics.

Play leads to improved skills and, facilitates initiative and decision-making (creativity) and also improves relationships with others.

Technical skills, such as keeping possession, shooting at goal, passing, receiving, running with the ball, and dribbling are all used in play.

Pressure from opponents helps in the teaching and improvement of these techniques and turning them into skills.

The MORE you get in small sided games!

- More enjoyment and learning.
- More touches on the ball.
- More decisions during play, therefore more concentration is required as the ball is never far away.
- More involved in the game.
- More individual attention.
- More goal scoring opportunities, which is what children want.
- More attacking and defending movements and situations.
- More freedom to play, therefore more enjoyment and development of creativity.
- More intensity, therefore development of physical literacy and fitness happens within the game.

Small Sided Statistics

- Players touch the ball five times more often in 4v4 soccer, than in 11v11 soccer and three times more often than in 7v7 soccer.
- Players are three time more often in 1v1 situations in 4v4, than in 11v11 soccer and 50% more often than in 7v7 soccer.
- Goals are scored every two minutes in 4v4 soccer on average, while every 4 minutes in 7v7 soccer on average.
- Ball is out of play 8% of the time in 4v4 soccer, 14% in 7v7 soccer and 34% in 11v11 soccer.

Initiation to playing formats on small sided fields

One player coming up against another is at the very heart of the game as the players' individual qualities come into play.

A 1v1 game gives two children the opportunity to develop their basic tactics; attacking and defending, while focusing on the technical aspects of dribbling and protecting the ball.

As soon as another player is added to the activity (2v1), the situation changes. The child can now pass the ball and must decide which option to choose.

As more players are added beyond two, the more complex the game becomes. Developing vision is a better concept of team play and creativity.

Four Corner Development Model

Technical/Tactical Development

Players improve by playing lots of soccer with skilled mix of guidance, challenge, appropriate questioning, demonstration and teaching.

- Encourage players to try new skills.
- Appropriate challenges may be set for the whole group or for individuals within the group.
- Activities should replicate the demands of the game, encouraging players to think and make decisions just as they would in a game.

Physical Development

To become an effective soccer player there are basic physical movement skills that need to be developed. Agility, balance, coordination and speed are all essential qualities for players; between the ages of 4-12 young players have a “window of opportunity” to develop these attributes.

- Children are not mini adults and shouldn't be subjected to running laps of the field and doing push-ups.
- Through well designed sessions all coaching activities can include physical outcomes.
- Appropriate movement skills such as tag games and activities which develop agility, balance and coordination should be encouraged through enjoyable games.
- Don't expect too much from young players too soon!

Psychological/Mental Development

Creating learning environments that challenge players to be imaginative, creative and reflect on their performance –both during and after sessions –is fundamental to the development of the future player. Coaches should adopt different coaching styles and methods to meet the individual needs of young players, understanding that there is more than one way for players to learn the game.

- Session activities and coaching methods should ensure communication with different types of learners –Visual, Auditory and Kinesthetic (doing).

Social/Emotional Development

Playing soccer can help children learn many life skills; cooperation, teamwork, communication, and friendship are some of the benefits of playing the game. To allow these social skills to develop, players should be allowed a safe and supportive environment and given encouragement to learn the game.

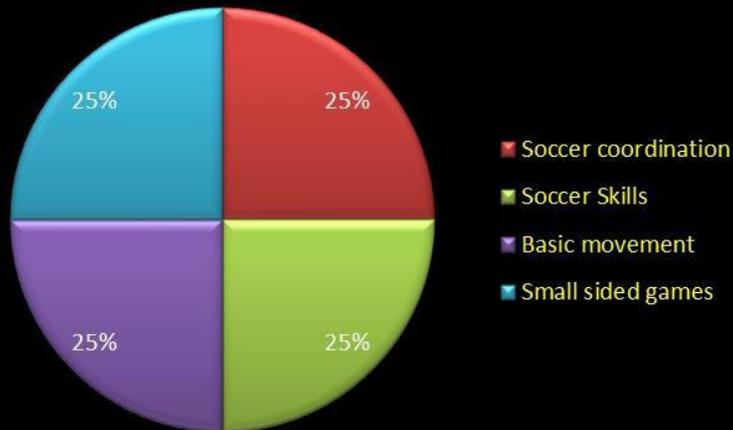

- How players are treated is critical to ensuring this is positive and fulfilling for the young player.
- Players should be praised and recognized for effort and endeavor as well as ability. This will highlight the process of learning and striving to get better rather than just the final outcome.
- Demonstrate your values and beliefs in your behavior.
