St. John's College High School, along with Wrestling to Beat the Streets DC, will host the Second Annual Crush Cancer Multi-State Tournament on Sunday, October 1, 2017. The tournament offers both a competition and the opportunity to contribute to an important cause. This tournament is open to wrestlers of all skill levels and ages, including youth, high school and open competitors.

Wrestlers take on many challenges in competing in this sport and in life. We all recognize the importance of rising to the challenge to support the worldwide fight to Crush Cancer. Some of our family and friends may have faced this battle, and (as described below) even members of our local wrestling community must meet this challenge.

The Challenge Affecting All of Us and Our Local Wrestling Community:

Johns Hopkins Medicine is on the front lines of the battle to fight cancer and is dedicated each and every day to this important cause. Cancer affects so many around the world, but its impact is also felt closer to home, including those that remain committed to supporting our wrestling community.

Robert Brams, a long time member of the local wrestling community, was diagnosed with a brain tumor and was operated on at Johns Hopkins, where he will be treated for life.

A former wrestler and youth wrestling coach, Brams has been a long-time supporter of the wrestling community as legal counsel to USA Wrestling in its successful effort to bring wrestling back into the Olympics, by serving on the National Board of the Wrestlers in Business Network, by Chairing the Advisory Board of Wrestling to Beat the Streets, DC and as father of a former St. John's wrestler.

To support Johns Hopkins focused cancer research, please consider making a donation to Hopkins as provided below.
